CALL FOR PAPERS

ONLINE International Scientific Conference

China and the Chinese in the modern world

13th June 2020

The conference aims to explore the role, the position and the development of China in the modern world. It will seek an answer to the question whether or not China will be taking a primary position in confronting current global challenges. It will also serve as a platform for sharing research ideas and findings concerning various cultural aspects of being Chinese, technological prospects and medical health care, the economy and environment in state policy, the matter of religion in spiritual life in China, the position and power of the Chinese diaspora in the world and relations between individuals and the society in China.

Possible paper topics include but are not limited to the following:

- Identifying as Chinese while living abroad
- Social credit system and its role in Chinese society
- Short-term solutions vs long-term consequences provided by China
- China as a leader in confronting global warming
- Outer space – how PRC is planning to explore it
- China's Arctic Silk Road
- 2021's new 5 year plan – China's economic prospects
- Healthy China 2030
- Are urbanization demands ready for the forthcoming migration process

Working language of the conference: English.
